BongkarnGraphic/Shutterstock Taking a screenshot on Mac isn't a straightforward process, but once you figure out the correct keyboard shortcut, it still saves all of your screenshots straight to the Desktop by default. You can change that pretty easily, though. Let's take a look at how. You can change the default save location from the screenshot tool. Begin by pressing Command+Shift+5 simultaneously on your keyboard. Apple Next, in the screenshot tool, click the "Options" button. At the top of the pop-up menu, under the Save To section, you'll see the following built-in options: Desktop: The default option, which will save all your screenshots as individual files. Clipboard: Use this option to paste the shot into a different app immediately. It's probably the cleanest choice if you don't like cluttering up your hard drive with extra files. Messages: This option opens a new message with the screenshot attached. This allows you to send it to one of your contacts quickly. Mail: This option creates a new email in the Mail app with the screenshot attached. If you'd like to send screenshots through a web client like Gmail, it's best to use the Clipboard option and paste it in manually. Preview: This opens the screenshot in Preview, where you can edit it before saving it to your computer or copying it to the clipboard. Alternatively, at the bottom of the list of options, you can click the "Other Location" listing to select a different folder on your computer. A Finder window will appear. Navigate to the desired folder and then click the "Choose" button. Whatever setting you choose, your Mac will remember this setting and use it for all screenshots in the future. You can also use the same menu to set a 5- or 10-second timer, show a floating thumbnail, remember the last selection, and whether or not to show the mouse pointer in screenshots. RELATED: How to Screenshot on a Mac Your Mac makes it pretty easy to take screenshots, but soon enough you'll end up with a desktop that's overflowing with them. That's because the default save location for Mac screenshots is the desktop. But if you're like me, you like to keep your desktop clean, and to do that you have three choices: Stop taking screenshots on your Mac, keep moving or deleting old screenshots, or change where your screenshots are saved. Our focus is going to be on the third choice today as we're going to learn how to change where your Mac saves them. How to avoid screenshot clutter on your Mac The easiest way to avoid screenshot clutter on the Mac is by saving screenshots to your clipboard and pasting them inside other apps. Effectively, the screenshot won't be saved on your Mac, which helps you avoid all that clutter. If you take screenshots of casual conversations and send them to your friends, or if you're looking for a quick way to send screenshots to your photo editing app, this is definitely the best way for you to go. On the Mac, use the keyboard shortcut Command + Control + Shift + 3 to take a screenshot of the entire screen and save it to the clipboard. You can then use Command + V in other apps to paste the screenshot wherever you want to. Similarly, Command + Control + Shift + 4 lets you take a screenshot of a part of the screen. After hitting the shortcut, click and drag around the portion of the screen that you want to snap. When you're done, paste the screenshot wherever you like. How to change where your screenshots are saved on Mac If you like saving screenshots, you can easily change the save location by using the Command + Shift + 5 keyboard shortcut and clicking Options in the floating screenshot menu. Now check the Save to section at the top and choose any folder that you like. If your preferred folder isn't listed, click Other Location and save it wherever you need. The next time you take a screenshot with Command + Shift + 3 or Command + Shift + 4 on your Mac, it'll be saved to the new location that you just selected. It's important to know how to change your username on a Mac, especially if multiple people use your computer. You can change your username on your account any time you want, as long as you have the right administrator password. Here's how to change your username on a Mac without creating any problems. Before you begin, please take the time to back up any important information that you may need from this user account. If something goes wrong, you could accidentally lock the account or create other problems that may leave you without access, so prepare accordingly. Note: This method works with the latest MacOS updates, even on Big Sur. Some of the icons or names may be a little different, but the basic steps are the same. If you don't have one of the latest updates, then your OS is already a few years out of date, and we suggest you update it before you try changing usernames. Step 1: Log in to a different administrator account You cannot rename an account that you are currently using. So, your first step is logging out and then logging in to your administrator account (the one that provides the authorization to change things like usernames). You can log out at any time by selecting the Apple logo in the upper-left corner of your Mac and choosing Log Out [Name]. If the account that you're currently using has administrator privileges, then you'll need to find a workaround. The easiest way is to create an alternative administrator account for these steps. You can delete this temporary account when you are finished with the other steps. Step 2: Rename the home folder For a complete name change, you will need to start with your home folder. Your home folders are located in the Users folder. You should be able to find the Users folder by going to the Finder Menu > Go > Go to Folder, and then typing in "Users." Alternatively, open Finder and press Cmd + Shift + C. Double-click the Name of Your Boot Drive, then double-click the Users folder. Here, look for the folder that has the short name of the username you want to change. For example, if the full name is John Mac, then the short name may just be John — or, it may be identical to the full name. Jot this name down (you'll need it later), and then change the short name to the name that you want. Note that it mustn't have any spaces. You'll have to put in the administrator password again at this point. Step 3: Log in to Users and Groups to find your user profile Go to Menu Bar > System Preferences. Here, select Users and Groups, and click the Padlock button so that you can start making changes. You will probably have to enter the administrator password again at this stage. Look for the username that you want to change and right-click or Ctrl-click on it. From the context menu, choose Advanced Options. This should take you to a new window. Step 4: Rename the proper fields and restart In the Advanced Options menu, find the fields titled Account Name and Home Directory. You should begin with the Account Name field. You will need to match the name in the Account Name field to the name you gave to the home folder in step 3. A common mistake at this point is to forget to match the names exactly. Every space and character must be identical. If you add new characters, spaces, or anything else that is different from the name you gave to the home folder, you won't be able to proceed to the next step. You will then need to go to the Home Directory option once you've completed this step. Follow the same steps as before so that you're re-entering the new username you've created for your Mac. You can only modify short account names with the Account Name and Home Directory fields. You'll have to use the Full Name field to alter a more widely used, full username. To ensure unique usernames, the Full Name field allows you to use spaces between words. When you're done, navigate to Advanced Options > OK. The last step is to restart your Mac. When the computer turns back on, the login page will ask for the information needed to access your modified account. Make sure that your files and apps are still visible and that everything is functioning correctly. Make sure that only your username has been changed by opening some of your older documents or apps and checking that they look the same as before. You'll know your new username is functioning when you don't see anything out of the ordinary. Editors' Recommendations M.A.C. seems to be churning out collaborations at lightning speed these days. Two days ago the brand teased its Good Luck Trolls collection, a line of makeup inspired by everyone's favorite crazy-haired, pleasantly plump, perpetually naked toys from the '90s. And just a little over 24 hours later, we're happy to announce the company's forthcoming fashion partnership with Shanghai-based designer Chris Chang of Poesia, available online at maccosmetics.com on May 5 and at counters May 12. If you're not familiar with Chang, here's a (very) brief bio: Raised in San Francisco and educated at Parsons, she now lives in Shanghai, and her designs are sold at Opening Ceremony. A few months ago, I had the pleasure of meeting Chang at the M.A.C. Pro Store for a preview of the line and a quick chat. "I've been wearing M.A.C. since my college days, so when this collaboration opportunity came, it was like a dream come true," she said of the collaboration. Keep reading to find out what, exactly, that dream entailed. The packaging is insanely cool. How did you come up with it? "It's a silk screen print. You never see makeup that's packaged in prints, so in the beginning, they had a lot of trouble getting it to glue over shapes smoothly. It's a gorgeous collage of icons, symbols, and illustrations that I've used in my past collections. The colors are also very much your aesthetic, but did you have any specific inspirations for the collection?" The theme is Kunqu Madness. Kunqu is one of the oldest performance arts from China that combines singing, poetry, acrobatics, and dance—and a lot of hand gestures. And Kunqu has a very specific, avant-garde look. The makeup and costumes are exaggerated, so when I was asked to collaborate it took me five minutes to decide that this is going to be around Kunqu. In the collection there are all of the colors you see in the costumes. The original idea was actually to be called Kunqu on Acid. "It's kind of trippy, actually. "It's trippy. But the name didn't get approved, so we turned it into Kunqu Madness. "How did the collaboration come about in the first place?" They found me because I was doing prints and colors even before Mary Katrantzou came along and it came into trend. M.A.C. is always scouting for new people for their collaborations, so they actually found me a while ago, and we were kindred spirits. They gave me free range with the product and the packaging design, and that was such a blessing. They changed nothing, they suggested nothing, and just said, "Do what you like and do what you think looks good." It was the perfect crossover."
